Malaysia is a country in Southeast Asia, with a tropical climate, fantastic beaches, and a fascinating colonial history. Life in Malaysia is generally easy, affordable, and low-stress; the locals are very friendly, and it has great infrastructure which is constantly expanding.

Malaysia has a lot of employment opportunities, and even though there are not too many social security benefits for foreigners unless they are a permanent resident, the costs for things like health care are low, and the quality is excellent.

Entry Visa

Citizens from a lot of countries, including most of Europe, can enter Malaysia for a short stay without a visa.

Work Permit / Residence Permit

In order to receive a Malaysian Work Permit (Employment Pass), an individual must have a highly skilled position, and a salary of at least MYR 3,000 per month. The employer must first get approval by the Expatriate Committee; after that, they need to apply for the work visa at the Immigration Department; when the work visa is granted, the employee will receive a visa approval letter, which will allow them to enter Malaysia. After arrival, the employee will get a work permit card at Immigration; this also works as a temporary residence permit.

Permanent Residence Permit

It is possible for foreign nationals to apply for a permanent residence, provided they are a highly skilled professional with at least 3 years' seniority at a private company in Malaysia and are recommended by a Malaysian authoritative agency related to your field. Alternatively, there is also a point-based system for individuals who have lived in Malaysia with a valid work permit for several years, where points are scored for duration of employment, qualifications, investments, proficiency in the language and several other categories.

Termination & Severance

After employment termination, employees are entitled to a minimum statutory severance pay, which is dependent on the length of employment.
